2011 National Brownfields Conference

April 3 – 5 in Philadelphia, PA

Submit your session proposals for Brownfields 2011:

The National Brownfields Conference, cosponsored by the U.S. EPA and the International City/County Management Association (ICMA), is headed to Philadelphia on April 3-5, 2011. Now in its 14th year, the National Brownfields Conference is the premier forum for knowledge-building, networking, and business development focused on the redevelopment of brownfields properties and the sustainable revitalization of communities.

The educational program for Brownfields 2011 is a direct result of the conference's national call for ideas, and is designed to address the important issues facing brownfields' practitioners, policy makers, and communities today. This year, conference organizers are particularly interested in new ideas related to community engagement and environmental justice, green jobs, sustainability, the business of brownfields, green technology and emerging solutions, and planning for community revitalization. Additionally, the Brownfields 2011 Planning Committee wants to encourage more interactive educational sessions in hopes of having at least 60 percent of the sessions using the always popular marketplace/roundtable format and the newly established public dialogue/debate format.

Please submit your session proposal by the deadline of July 2, 2010, at: www.brownfields2011.org. For more information, please contact Julie Butler at jbutler@icma.org or visit the conference website at: <http://www.brownfields2011.org/en/home/>.
